SHAPING BETTER CITIES

NLA INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM

FRIDAY 14 JUNE 2019
9:00–13:30

LONDON CITY HALL
THE QUEEN’S WALK
LONDON SE1 2AA
The first two decades of this urban century have witnessed a surge past 50 per cent in city populations worldwide, with the 60 per cent benchmark now fast approaching. Cities are growing beyond their established footprints and the capacity of their housing, infrastructure, and utilities. 75 per cent of GDP is now generated in cities. Urban real estate, transport, industry and energy combined represent almost 80 per cent of all carbon emissions.

These decades have underlined the depth of the urban carbon challenge, and also revealed a new generation of enabling technologies such as AI, genomics, dark fibre, cloud computing, virtual reality, super-materials, and alternative energy sources. Such technologies provide the capacity to foster new tools for better urban planning and living, smarter city systems, and the greening of the metropolis. They drive new urban industries such as fintech, medtech, mobility as a service, digital media, virtual reality, telemedicine, sharing platforms, and circularisation. These industries prioritise urban locations and prefer places that are liveable, authentic, and inspiring. New technologies make place matter more.

The quest is on to shape better cities. Leaders, planners, and investors must use these new tools and couple them with vision and capital if the promise of the urban century is to be secured, and its inherent risks avoided. Making this work requires new forms of city and civic leadership: citizen-centred and technology-enabled, fixing and expanding city systems, making new places that really work, adapting to new technologies and fostering new sources of jobs, prosperity, revenues, and capital.

This stretches beyond our known planning practices and policy frameworks. City to city dialogue has become critical to share and accelerate innovation and learning. As cities are themselves the centres of experiment, this inaugural NLA International Symposium provides the platform for them to learn from one another and share approaches for sustainable and prosperous futures.

Session One: Towards the Zero Carbon City

Urban real estate, transport, industry and energy combined represent almost 80 per cent of all carbon emissions. How are global cities tackling the world’s most critical issue: the future of our planet? What innovative action is being taken to realise a zero-carbon future? What role must business and industry play in realising that vision?

Session Two: Scaling the Innovation Economy

New technologies are spawning the fourth industrial revolution. This revolution rests upon new business models and more agile talent. It also places new requirements on places to support innovation processes. Can technologies make cities both more prosperous and more equal? How are these cities becoming adapted to the future world of work and the need to attract and retain skills and talent? What role is the knowledge economy playing in how these cities are shaping their future?

Session Three: Dreaming the Future City

New forms of city and civic leadership are required to realise the potential of citizen centred but technology enabled urban planning. How are these cities fixing and expanding city systems and making new places that really work, adapting to new technologies? How are these cities making data-driven decisions about how we plan and build in the long term?
Ana Ariño
Executive Vice President and Chief Strategy Officer, New York City Economic Development Corporation

Ana is tasked with making investments in strategic sectors to develop a diversified and competitive economy in which all New Yorkers can participate. Her work focuses on developing public-private partnerships to create investment funds, incubators and accelerators, university partnerships, and talent training to attract and grow businesses in 21st century sectors. During her tenure, she has overseen the city’s historic investments in cybersecurity, life sciences, smart cities, artificial intelligence, blockchain and AR/VR. She previously led NYCEDC’s strategy team, which is tasked with advising the organization’s president and New York City’s City Hall on a range of economic development issues. @NYCEDC

Theo Blackwell MBE
Chief Digital Officer for London, Greater London Authority

As London’s first Chief Digital Officer, Theo plays a leading role in realising the Mayor’s ambition to make London the world’s smartest city, ensuring that the capital’s status as a global tech hub helps transform the way public services are designed and delivered, making them more accessible, efficient and responsive to the needs of Londoners. Theo was recognised with an MBE for services to local government digital transformation in the Queen’s 2019 New Year’s honours list. @CDO_LDN

Greg Clark CBE
Global Advisor, Future Cities and New Industries

Greg is Chairman of the Business of Cities Ltd, providing global benchmarking services on city performance. He is also a global advisor, author, and non-executive director. He is Professor, and Co-Chairman of Advisory Board, City Leadership Lab, UCL and Fellow of the Academy of Social Sciences. His expertise covers city economies, globalisation and trade, city identity and promotion, planning and transport, city and metropolitan strategic planning, technology and smart cities, urban investment, national and regional strategies.

Cobus Bothma

INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMME

NLA’s International Programme facilitates national and global discussion, connecting London with other cities in order to exchange information, discuss and debate shared urban issues, and compare approaches. We do this through a series of international dialogue events and by hosting many international delegations at our home in central London.

Each International Dialogue brings two cities together using a live video link so that speakers and audiences can exchange information about key issues that are common to both places. Cities featuring in the programme include New York, Sydney, Toronto, Vancouver, Chicago and Stockholm, with many more to come such as San Francisco and Hong Kong, as well as national cities such as Manchester and Birmingham.

As London’s centre for the built environment, NLA regularly welcomes international delegations, facilitating opportunities for visiting professionals, politicians and embassies to learn more about London’s development and current urban issues through bespoke programmes, which are tailored to the needs of the group.

The programme is proudly supported by these organisations.

The VUCITY platform creates a digital twin of a city, providing the world’s largest and most accurate 3D models that intelligently show the real-life impact of new buildings and infrastructure on their surrounding environment, accurate to within 15cm. The platform enables new schemes to be accurately tested and developed in the pre-application stage in a way that, until now, has not been possible. VUCITY covers the whole of London – 1,619 square kilometres – modelled, and the centres of other major cities including New York, Paris, Manchester, Birmingham, Belfast, Brighton and Oxford. Along with the existing cityscape, the platform includes consented but as yet unbuilt schemes within the platform, enabling planning decisions to be made taking into account the future, not just the present. VUCITY helps everyone involved in delivering buildings and infrastructure make faster, more informed decisions, helping create a better future for all.

Addressing the edges: working across London’s borough boundaries
Wednesday 19 June, 18:30–21:00
Evening talk

Hear about how London’s borough boundaries became what they are today, and from those involved in delivering projects that have required new methods to address the city’s edges. Administrative boundaries means that there is always an edge to contend with when shaping the city. Throughout the history of London these spatial, social and economic boundaries have changed frequently and even today, responsibility and ownership of the edges can be unclear, leading to challenging circumstances when delivering projects that cross administrative boundaries.

London and Melbourne: what makes a ‘liveable’ city?
Thursday 11 July, 08:30–10:00
International dialogue

Melbourne consistently ranks very high as the world’s most liveable city, yet London rarely features in the top forty. What in fact makes a liveable city? What can London learn about Melbourne’s liveability? What are the benefits of this metric?

Ticketed - NLA Members discounted

On Location – The SE1 Powerhouse:
South Bank to London Bridge
Wednesday 17 July, 13:00–19:00

The catalytic effect of the major infrastructure updates at London Bridge and Waterloo is evidenced in the amount of development currently reshaping London’s South Bank. The afternoon session will bring together local stakeholders including council representatives, developers, investors, architects and occupiers to look at how investment is shaping the area.
